

I always dread what I write,

I dread it because the words on a page are never what I feel.

I scour my mind for words that will finally work, but I fail, all the words fall short.

I would dread even more the day that I am content with my words, that would mean that I no longer feel everything.